Sources of Income

Business & Self Employment

This comes from running your own business or working for yourself where you earn money after paying your expenses.

Critical Analysis

What are some risks and rewards of choosing to start your own business instead of working for an employer?

Employment's Income (Earned Income)

This is the money you get from working for someone else, like a job where you earn a wage or salary for the hours you work.

Critical Analysis

If two people work the same job but one saves their income while the other spends it all, how might their financial situations look in 10 years?

Investment Income

This is money earned from putting your money into things like stocks, bonds, or savings accounts that grow over time.

Critical Analysis

Why might someone choose to invest their money instead of keeping it all in a savings account?

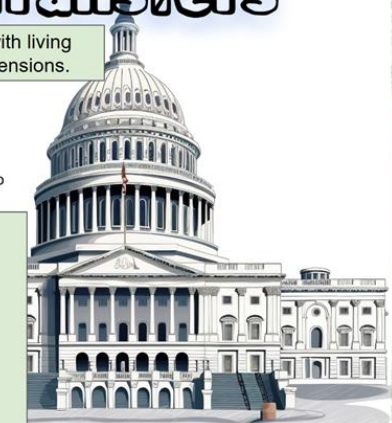

Government Transfers

This is the money the government gives to people to help with living expenses, such as student aid, unemployment benefits, or pensions.

Critical Analysis

Do you think it is important for the government to provide financial support to people?

Rent Income

This is money you earn when you own something like a house or apartment and rent it out. You can also use it in exchange for payment.

Critical Analysis

What challenges a person might face when renting property to others?

Scenarios

What source of income is demonstrated in each scenario?

- Maria works at a grocery store after school and gets paid every two weeks.
- James mows lawns in his neighborhood during the summer and keeps the money he earns.
- Sophia buys some stocks in a company and earns dividends when the company does well.
- Ethan receives financial aid from the government to help pay for college.
- The Johnson family owns a small apartment building and collects rent from tenants each month.

- Olivia designs bracelets and sells them online, keeping the profit after paying for materials.
- Daniel's grandmother receives a pension check each month from the government after retiring.
- Tyler puts money into a savings account and earns interest from the bank.
- Emma babysits on weekends and gets paid by the families she helps.
- Lucas rents out his old bike to kids in the neighborhood for a small fee.
